WELCOME TO METRO

KIMBERLY M. AQUILINA, WEB REPORTER

I tweeted #MeToo today because I was sexually assaulted by a family member seven years ago. Less than a year ago, I finally had that moment where I took my power back. I don't need to scurry away in fear or have an anxiety attack when I see him and spin out of control for a week. He did wrong. Speaking out was the right thing. Whether you are the victim of catcalls, ogling from strangers or off-handed comments from the boss, you are not the problem when you speak up. You are not making everyone else's day worse. You are doing the right thing. And you will have your moment when you get your power back. Today Metro changed its logo to #Metoo to help raise awareness about the prevalence of sexual assault and harassment in our society. Read on or visit metro.us for our full coverage.

BERGDAHL PLEADS GUILTY TO DESERTION

1 Army Sergeant Bowe Bergdahl, accused of endangering fellow soldiers who searched for him after he walked off his combat outpost in Afghanistan in 2009 and was captured by the Taliban, pleaded guilty to desertion and misbehavior before the enemy. In court, Bergdahl admitted leaving his post in Paktika province in June 2009. He said he got lost after 20 minutes, was captured two or three hours later, and that he never wanted to put anyone at risk. "I was captured by the enemy against my will," the 31-year-old Idaho native told the hearing. "At the time I had no intention of causing search and recovery operations. ... It's very inexcusable." The offense of misbehavior before the enemy carries a possible life sentence. Neither side has said whether Bergdahl has entered into a plea agreement with prosecutors.

FBI: US POLICE DEATHS ON DUTY SPIKED IN 2016

2 Sixty-six police officers were killed on the job by felons in 2016, up about 61 percent from 41 deaths a year ago, the FBI said. The number was the second highest since 2011, when 72 officers were killed by felons, according to the FBI report. Attorney General Jeff Sessions in a statement called the numbers "shocking" and "unacceptable," and said the Justice Department would work toward reducing violent crime. The findings bolster the so-called Blue Lives Matter movement, which advocates tougher hate-crime sentences for the murder of police officers. It was launched in response to Black Lives Matter, and gained momentum last year after police officers were killed in both Dallas and Baton Rouge. Forty-one officers killed last year were employed by city police departments, and 30 officers were located in the South.

NFL SEEKS COMPROMISE SOLUTION TO PROTESTS

4 The NFL will try to find a way to move on from the controversial issue of players protesting during the national anthem before games when it meets with team owners in New York this week for a regularlyscheduled meeting. The gesture by players who say they are protesting racial inequality and injustice has picked up steam ever since President Donald Trump criticized the league last month for allowing players to do so. The issue is sure to command much attention on Tuesday and Wednesday when the world's top-grossing sports league meets with team owners, players and their union's leaders inside a Manhattan hotel. For its part, the NFL has said it will not seek a mandate for players to stand during renditions of the "Star-Spangled Banner" but rather seek out some form of compromise.

CUBA RESPONSIBLE FOR SOUND ATTACKS: TRUMP

5 President Donald Trump said on Monday that he believes Havana is responsible for a series of incidents that Washington thinks hurt at least 22 U.S. diplomats over a period of months in Cuba, prompting Washington to scale back its presence there. "I do believe Cuba is responsible," Trump told reporters at an impromptu news conference in the White House Rose Garden. "I do believe that. And it's a very unusual attack, as you know. But I do believe Cuba is responsible." The United States has not formally concluded Cuba carried out the attacks, some of which involved high-pitched sounds, but it has said Havana is responsible for ensuring the safety and security of U.S. diplomatic personnel and failed to do so. At least 22 diplomatic personnel were affected by the unexplained incidents.

Boston Area Rape Crisis Center talks about impact of #MeToo campaign

Beginning Sunday night, hundreds of thousands of women shared that they've experienced sexual harassment or assault, as part of a viral social media campaign.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Hundreds of thousands of women, as well as some men, have taken to social media to share their own stories of sexual assault and harassment as part of the #MeToo campaign. Actress Alyssa Milano sparked the movement, writing Sunday on Twitter: "If all the women who have been sexually harassed or assaulted wrote 'Me too' as a status, we might give people a sense of the magnitude of the problem."

Metro reached out to Gina Scaramella, executive director of the Boston Area Rape Crisis Center, to hear about the impact of the movement.

What was your reaction to the campaign?

I didn't see it until late [Sunday] night. My entire feed was filled with it, so it was like, "Wow." I think that the fact that it took off so much, so quickly was surprising, but no. It didn't surprise me that many people would come forward. I think it's going to be surprising if you're a banker or work in a doughnut shop or somewhere else where this isn't what you talk about every day, to see your community talking about it.

What's the importance of this campaign?

It does help correct this myth that this is a really rare thing that happens only sometimes and only to certain people who happen to be clothed wrong, in the wrong place or doing the wrong thing. It shows that the vast majority of people you know are going to have experienced sexual violence of some sort.

What do you hope happens next?

For us, we know that the majority of people who come in for services or call our hotline heard about us from a friend. so if you want to do something to help, one thing you can do is make sure people know what resources are out there for them. Our hotline [800-841-8371] is available — whether someone's a survivor, friend or significant other — to call 24/7.

What if women aren't ready to speak out?

I do think it is really important for us as a community to recognize that not everybody is ready to label themselves in some way. If people are posting, it's great to be celebrating and supporting people who do feel safe to come forward. But it's also equally important to recognize that many more people are going to stay silent.

How many people come forward to BARCC about these experiences?

We go to the hospital more than once a day with someone who was acutely assaulted, just in the Boston area. Last year we went to the hospital 525 times, so that was someone who was assaulted within five days and made a decision to get forensic evidence collection — you've cut off so many other people right there. We get thousands of calls a year on our hotline and probably 500 to 600 people coming in each year for counseling. And we know that not everyone reports.

4 ways to make money as a college student

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

Your main gig is on campus, so find flexible side gigs for extra cash. ISTOCK

Cash-strapped students, take heart: There are ways to make money in college without sacrificing your sleep, studies or plasma.

Here's the rundown on four ways to earn some cash. The best option for you will depend on your needs: a steady paycheck, the occasional influx of coin or something you can put on the resume.

1. Side gigs

Consider college your main gig. Classes, homework and studying should take priority. But you can pick up work as your schedule allows, thanks to an ever-expanding gig economy. Side gigs let you dictate your schedule and workload, so you're not juggling three shifts during midterms.

IDEAS

Join TaskRabbit. Get paid to assemble furniture, do yard work, run errands or simply wait in line. You must be at least 21, pass a background check, work in a metro area where TaskRabbit operates and pay a $20 fee. Read more about how to make money with TaskRabbit.

Become a Wag walker. Pick up one-off and recurring dog-walking gigs with Wag. The app-based service lets you choose between 30- and 60-minute walks, which pay $20 and $30, respectively, minus Wag's fee. You can also earn tips, which you get to keep in full. You must be at least 18.

2. Quick cash

Need money now? Like, right now? Turn your old clothes, shoes, and electronics into fast cash. Selling items you don't use is an easy way to replenish your gas or grocery fund. Just make sure they actually belong to you because, no, your sister will not understand if you sell her sweater.

IDEAS

Clothing: Plato's Closet and Buffalo Exchange pay cash money on the spot for gently worn clothes, shoes, jackets, and handbags. Want to set your own pricing? Try Craigslist or Facebook Marketplace. Online consignment stores like ThredUp and Poshmark give you a wider potential customer base but don't pay out as quickly.

3. Part-time jobs

Flexibility is key here. You want a boss who will work around your class schedule, which will change every term, and your busy times at school — midterms, finals and major projects. Bonus points if the work aligns with your career interests or you can study on the job, says Timothy Jaconette, founder of Advanced Admit, a college guidance, and coaching company.

4. Paid internships

One of the main differences between a paid internship and a part-time job: Internships often satisfy academic requirements, something that can rarely be said about bartending or waiting tables. And while internships are typically temporary — a semester, a summer or an entire school year — they can turn into lasting career opportunities.

Internships "give you loads of contacts to be in touch with after graduation," says Valerie Streif, a senior adviser with Mentat, a career services company. "This is the best way to set you up with a career to walk into after you earn your degree."

YOUR PATHWAY TO SUCCESS

Automotive Technology: A Career Path to HIGH-DEMAND, HIGH-TECH JOBS

By all accounts, job openings in the automotive industry are plentiful. The only problem? Finding enough good people to fill them, according to David Protano, Chair of Automotive Technology and associate professor at BFIT. "It's not just technicians who are needed," Protano says. "It's automotive salespeople, parts specialists, service managers—all areas."

It's a matter of supply and demand. Many automotive workers are retiring, and not enough young people are entering this field to replenish the workforce. Others are leaving the field, partly because innovations in technology are driving major industry shifts.

"To be successful as a technician or in sales, you have to be familiar with the new technical dynamics in play," he says. For example, since new devices are smarter, more efficient and more varied, they're also more complex. Technicians need to use scanning devices to diagnose and repair a vehicle, and know how to read its data.

To keep up with industry trends, such as innovations in fuel alternatives, BFIT has expanded its course offerings to focus more on hybrid and electric cars. There's also more focus on diesel technology, since more manufacturers are using it in passenger cars.

BFIT students are prepared to hit their first job running, having trained on all makes and models in a live garage. The shop is not a simulation; it's run like any other full-service garage and is open to any and all customers—the only one like it in Massachusetts. "You read what do step by step, but when you do it hands-on, you understand how things work, how things fit together," says graduate Juan Franco.

Big-picture thinking also applies to the program's overall goals. "We want our students to graduate and be able to go right into an independent shop or dealership, move up the ranks and become a manager," says Protano. "The bachelor's degree takes students a step further and gives them management training so they can eventually open their own shop. The sky's the limit if they work hard and like to take on new challenges."

7 ways to avoid becoming a scary student-loan stat

Don't let your debt pile up.

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

Take control of your life by eradicating your student loans. ISTOCK

Student-loan horror stories are all too common these days. Here are seven ways to minimize and manage your debt to avoid those worst-case scenarios.

1. Exhaust federal student aid first
Private student loans tend to carry higher interest rates than federal loans. Private loans also offer fewer borrower protections, repayment options and opportunities for forgiveness, and they generally require a co-signer.
Before taking on private debt, submit the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, or FAFSA, to find out if you qualify for any grants, scholarships, work-study and federal loans. If you have any gaps that you and your family can't cover out of pocket, shop around by comparing lenders' interest rates, fees and borrower protections.

2. Limit how much you borrow
Before you borrow, understand the full scope of your college costs. Once you've exhausted savings, grants, scholarships and work-study, experts recommend borrowing no more than you can expect to make in your first year out of college.

3. Sign up for automatic payments
Payments that are more than 90 days late begin to affect your credit score. And if you go too long without making a payment on your federal loans, they'll default and the government can garnish your wages and tax refund. Your lender can also send a debt collector after you or sue you in court to collect repayment. To avoid the risk, sign up for automatic loan payments. If you are still having trouble, talk to your servicer about switching to an income-driven repayment plan.

4. Explore alternative repayment plans
The standard 10-year repayment plan is the fastest and least expensive way to pay off federal debt. But you'll need another option if you can't keep up.
There are six alternative federal repayment plans: graduated, extended and four income-driven repayment options. Use the federal repayment estimator to see which you're eligible for, and contact your servicer to enroll.

5. Work with your servicer if you're in default
Default occurs when your payments are late: 270 days for federal loans and one day for private loans. You'll face calls from bill collectors and your balance will grow due to fees and interest. If you end up in default, your servicer might temporarily lower your payments or offer you other short-term options, such as deferment or forbearance.

6. Watch out for student-debt-relief scams
Student-debt-relief companies charge high fees to enroll borrowers in their plans, such as federal consolidation, forgiveness and income-driven repayment. But you can enroll in these plans free through your loan servicer. There's not much you can do to stop these companies from calling, but you can learn how to spot a scam.

7. Keep an eye on retirement, too
Retirement might not be top of mind when paying back your loans, but the sooner you begin saving, the more time your money has to grow. And if your company offers a 401(k) plan with a matching benefit, you should take advantage. ANNA HELHOSKI

Michael Fassbender & Alicia Vikander maybe wed

In news that is a huge blow to some of us, Michael Fassbender and Alicia Vikander may be married now. There goes 24-year-old me's hopes and dreams.

Fassbender, 40, and Vikander, 29, reportedly tied the knot in Ibiza over the weekend. Some rando sources tell People that the couple exchanged vows at the La Granja farmstead resort surrounded by friends and family. Gross!

The couple started dating in 2014 after meeting on the set of a film nobody ended up watching, "The Light Between the Oceans." They made their debut as a couple at the Golden Globes in 2016, where Vikander was a double nominee for her performances in "The Danish Girl" and "Ex Machina."

Good for you guys, I guess.

He's a hot dude. She's an Academy-Award winning actress.
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES UNLESS OTHERWISE STATED

Demi Lovato is fine with her ex's engagement

A case of the ex.

Over the weekend, a 28-year-old named Joe Jonas — most famous for being the most eyebrow'd of the Jonas brothers — and a 21-year-old named Sophie Turner — most famous for being Sansa Mother Flipping Stark — got engaged. She's too young, but whatever! The real question is: What does Demi Lovato think about it?

Lovato, 25, used to date Jonas way back when in 2010, you see. And she's giving her two cents on the future nuptials. And not surprisingly, she's all about it.

"HUGE CONGRATS," she wrote via Instagram comment. All caps hers, not mine. "Soooo happy for the both of you."

Good thing these two have Lovato's approval. Now let's wait for the rest of the middle Jonas' exes — the Taylor Swifts and the Gigi Hadids — and see what they think. JK, who cares.

the word

Ed Sheeran had a little accident

Get ready for some news that will both shock you and awe you, and make you question why we're even on this Earth in the first place: Ed Sheeran has broken his arm.

The 26-year-old singer posted a picture on Instagram Monday morning of his myriad bad tattoos, his right arm in a cast and a sling on his left.

"I've had a bit of a bicycle accident and I'm currently waiting on some medical advice, which may affect some of my upcoming shows," he wrote. The Sun reports that Sheeran was riding his bike in London when he was hit by a car, but that news is so far unconfirmed.

You know, I broke my arm once riding my bike. My elbow to be exact. But it wasn't front page on People. What's the difference between me and Ed Sheeran? That remains to be seen.

Shocking. Upsetting. Bad.

Kate Middleton cut her hair

Her friendship with Paddington is #inspirational.

Kate Middleton — pregnant with a third child, thus pushing the hot Ginger prince and his American girlfriend further and further away from the throne — made a "surprise appearance" over the weekend. And guess what? She cut her hair!

The Daily Mail refers to it as "shorter" and "glossier." What could it mean!? I don't know, but it did look very good as she was dancing with a man dressed in a giant Paddington Bear costume.

Kate has spent a lot of time out of the spotlight since announcing her pregnancy, as she suffers from severe morning sickness. She even missed Prince George's first day of school! Poor thing.

Her due date hasn't been announced, but who cares? Her hair!

John Boyega talks 'Pacific Rim: Uprising'

On both sides of the camera.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroBOS
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

There's a lot of talk about big movers and shakers in Hollywood right now, but one that's receiving nothing but good press is John Boyega, "Star Wars: The Last Jedi" actor and now hands-on producer with his own company. And not one to start small, his first project is the $150 million blockbuster "Pacific Rim: Uprising."

John Boyega plays Idris Elba's son in the sequel. UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Were you wary about going into another sci-fi franchise?
"Definitely!" says Boyega. "My main fixation was character. I didn't want to do two franchise films where the characters are basically the same thing. Thankfully I had the opportunity to show that versatility is possible within two franchises by stepping into two characters."

What's the impact of fans on this sequel?
"One of the main reasons why I decided to have behind the scenes creative input is that 'Pacific Rim' is a franchise where the fans are just hopeful about it," he shares. "When the first film came out there was a back and forth about whether a sequel was going to happen, and that was a conversation for a long time. So this is sacred ground … We've made sure that the real fans are pleased but also new fans are up to speed as well. So we've got all your backs. Don't worry."

What made you want to become a producer?
"The big thing for me was getting to be involved in the big conversations that actors are not involved in," says Boyega. "To help influence the project in a way that we can attract the fans we want. The challenge for 'Pacific Rim' is to bring back an original idea that has a following, but also to introduce a new audience into this world. And that means a change of pace and approach, and being involved in those conversations. You know, it was funny. Because when I wrapped on set as an actor, I'd have to go to work as a producer. Which meant having two-hour-long meetings about visual effects where everything is explained, and I always wanted to implement my ideas into that, and find a place for my love for movies. And it was nice getting a 360 degree view of how things work that wasn't too academic. To be on the ground I learnt a lot, and it also impacts your acting a lot as well just in terms of how many elements are happening on set."

GETTY

What did you want to achieve with "Uprising"?
"The best sci-fi has the best social commentary," he says. "I think sci-fi is able to comment on the world in a light way that isn't overbearing, and you're still having fun. I think the feeling of wanting to be a hero — to find the best strength within yourself — is something that people can relate with. When they go to see trailers and they see Batman and all those guys coming together to unite. … People love unity. Especially in the sci-fi genre. Hence why we're excited when one person from this film joins together with the others. And that's what I made sure 'Pacific Rim: Uprising' had a lot of."

"Pacific Rim: Uprising" will be released in the spring of 2018.

Where to watch the Celtics' season opener

Cheer on Boston at these area bars.

MATT JUUL
@RunTheJuuls
matthew.juul@metro.us

The Celtics are back in action as they kick off the NBA season with a tough game against LeBron James and the Cavaliers. While Kyrie Irving and company won't throw down at home in Boston until Wednesday, fans can still catch all the fun from Cleveland at these area bars on Tuesday night. Here are a few recommendations for where to watch the Celtics' season opener.

The Greatest Bar
This fan-favorite sports bar is throwing a big bash for Tuesday's season opener. The Greatest Bar is hosting a special kickoff party where lucky attendees can win tickets to an upcoming Celtics home game. After watching the evening's match-up, fans are invited to hit the dance floors, play some Skeeball and more.
262 Friend St., Boston, thegreatestbar.com

Game On
Unleash your inner gamer while cheering on the Celtics at this Fenway hotspot. Aside from Game On's collection of HDTVs and a massive menu of food and drinks, the bar also features cornhole sets, ping-pong tables, a batting cage and more. Stop by for trivia night on Tuesdays for a chance to win Celtics tickets and other cool prizes.
82 Lansdowne St., Boston, gameonboston.com

Champions
Featuring a 23-foot wall of screens and a stacked beer menu, Champions has everything fans need to celebrate the new NBA season. Stop by for a drink, or chow down on a serious game day meal with some friends. We suggest grabbing the sampler tower, which comes complete with two pounds of wings, eight cheeseburger sliders, cheese fries, onion rings, plus plenty of dips and sauces.

2017-18 NBA SEASON PREVIEW

Metro sports editors predict the 2017-18 NBA season.

METRO STAFF
@Metro_US
sports@metro.us

Metro's sports editors in Boston (Matt Burke), Philly (Evan Macy) and New York (Joe Pantorno) made their predictions on which players and teams will reign supreme in the NBA in 2017-18.

Basketball is finally back!

And here is what to expect this season:

East Champs

Burke: Celtics. LeBron has one foot out the door to Los Angeles. By losing to the Celtics in the East finals it'll give him the perfect excuse to bolt to the Lakers next summer. Isaiah Thomas isn't going to be healthy by New Year's Day and he no longer has Brad Stevens (who propelled Isaiah from a bench player to a legit All-Star in two years) whispering in his ear.

Macy: Cavaliers: The Celtics-Cavaliers Eastern Conference Finals bout could be an epic six- or seven-game series, but LeBron James is still in his prime and a healthy supporting cast, even with Kyrie Irving in Boston and not Cleveland, is enough for the Cavs to prevail in a very weak East. Isaiah Thomas' addition and perhaps the space opened up for more Kevin Love love — as well as a not-done-yet Dwyane Wade — lifts the Cavs again.

Pantorno: Cavaliers. I wish we could just fast-forward to springtime so we can just see this Cavaliers-Celtics Eastern Conference Final matchup. Given Boston's additions this offseason, I understand how choosing between these two is a toss-up, but I always have a hard time going against LeBron James and an angry Isaiah Thomas.

West Champs

Burke: Warriors. I think OKC will be able to snag a game or two from Golden State in the West Finals, but that's about it.

Macy: Warriors. I wish there was another potential pick -any other team that could fathomably be selected here. The Rockets will have growing pains, the Spurs are looking like they will drop off and the Thunder — as great a storyline as it would be — have tons to figure out themselves. Maybe 2019 goes another way, but in June of 2018 Golden State rises above once again.

Pantorno: Warriors. Unless the Western Conference All-Stars decided to join forces and play competitively, no one is withholding the Warriors from the Finals unless injuries hit. The Rockets, Thunder, Spurs and Timberwolves can lurk all they want, but they're just competing to get to a conference final and lose.

NBA Champs

Burke: Warriors over Celtics in 5. Brad Stevens is 2-2 against the Warriors in the past two seasons, but Golden State's roster remains the best in NBA history. Unfair.

Macy: Warriors over Cavs in 5. They are probably the best basketball team ever assembled. All we can do is sit back and enjoy.

Pantorno: Warriors over Cavs in 7. Curry, Durant, Thompson, Green, depth. Get ready to see the Larry O'Brien Trophy stay by the bay.

NBA Preview: MVP, ROY, more predictions

Metro's sports editors in Boston (Matt Burke), Philly (Evan Macy) and New York (Joe Pantorno) made their predictions on which players and teams will reign supreme in the NBA in 2017-18.

Basketball is finally back! And here is what to expect this season:

NBA MVP

Burke: Kyrie Irving. Irving is this year's Russell Westbrook in that he needs to prove he can carry a team on his own. His quest to also prove to LeBron that he's "for real" won't end with a championship this season, but it will end with the highest individual award you can receive in the sport of basketball.

Macy: LeBron James. I don't know, I feel like the raw fury that is King James will unleash this season and propel the almost GOAT to his fifth NBA MVP.

Pantorno: Giannis Antetokounmpo. Russell Westbrook has to split touches with Carmelo Anthony and Paul George. LeBron will have to co-exist with IT. James Harden's offense will be run by Chris Paul. Curry and Durant will continue their symbiotic partnership. But in Milwaukee, the Bucks are Antetokounmpo's team and he has the freakish skill-set to carry his team toward the top of the East.

Rookie of the Year

Burke: Lonzo Ball. The Lakers won't be any good, but Ball will make highlight reel passes on a nightly basis. Ben Simmons will be overshadowed by Joel Embiid in Philly. Ditto for Markelle Fultz. And Jayson Tatum's numbers with the contending Celtics won't be gaudy enough to warrant ROY.

Macy: Ben Simmons. This isn't a homer pick. This is a smart pick. Everyone is overlooking last year's No. 1 overall pick but the Sixers are an absolutely perfect place for the 6-foot-10 point guard. He has shooters at the wing to dish to in J.J Redick and Robert Covington, he has an insanely talented pick-and-roll mate in Embiid.

Pantorno: Dennis Smith Jr. The Dallas point guard can score from anywhere on the floor and has the hops to dominate Twitter with rim-shattering dunks. With Seth Curry sidelined, the Mavs' offense is all his. He'll just edge Ben Simmons for the award.

Surprise team

Burke: Hornets. Kemba Walker's points per game totals have climbed each of the past three seasons and he's just now entering his prime at the age of 27. Malik Monk was a sneaky good draft pick for Michael Jordan. Expect the Hornets to get a four seed in the ugly East.

Macy: Timberwolves. I would love to pick the Sixers here — and I still expect them to slide into the playoffs in a weak eastern conference, but the T-Wolves are the squad I expect to burst onto the scene as a real contender in the next couple years. That includes them taking the Warriors to seven games in the second round out west. You heard me. The influx of Jimmy Butler into a core with huge upside will make this the best team in Minnesota since Kevin Garnett left.

Pantorno: Jazz. Defense still means something to me and the Jazz are expected to provide a stifling brand of it. Rudy Gobert is at the center of all this and I could expect him to give Leonard a run for his money for Defensive Player of the Year award. METRO STAFF

Aries Personal changes will give you a professional image that will help you get ahead professionally or draw the attention of someone you want to get to know better.

Taurus Don't waffle when given a choice. If you want to make changes, consider your options and find out what's required. Information is key to getting things done right.

Gemini Choose to do something that makes you feel good about the way you look. Spend time with people who make you smile and appreciate you for who you are.

Cancer Personal problems, stress and displeasure with someone you live or work with will weigh heavily on your mind. Stay focused on accomplishment, not on setbacks.

Leo Improved health, proper diet and exercise and the direct handling of emotional issues will help you solve any dilemmas and reach your destination.

Virgo Liven things up a little by taking up a new pastime. Socializing more or spending time volunteering to help others will do you a world of good. Expand your interests.

Libra You may need to make adjustments if you want to fit in to a group or situation that requires unity. Bend a little, and others will meet you halfway.

Scorpio Keep your plans simple and doable. If you take on too much, you will fall short of your goal. You can ride a wave to victory if you are careful and observant.

Sagittarius Emotional stress can weaken your immune system. Take time to rejuvenate before you take on more responsibilities. Overreacting or arguing will be exhausting.

Capricorn Take a moment to gather information. Being informed will help you avoid mishaps when dealing with institutions or bureaucracy. Know what's expected of you.

Aquarius You have more leverage than you realize. Step things up and make clear what you want to see happen. Love is highlighted, and a commitment can be made.

Pisces Look at your financial situation. It's in your best interest to move funds around to accommodate some of the plans you want to pursue. EUGENIA LAST
